

Know What's In Your Skin Care Products

Is Beauty more than skin deep? Absolutely.

Your skin is your body's largest organ. It's also the thinnest: only 1/10th of an inch thick, and highly permeable – what you apply to your skin is absorbed into your bloodstream. Many skin care products use a multitude of hazardous ingredients – ingredients that go straight from the bottle or jar onto your skin, penetrating into your body. If you're a woman who wears make-up on a daily basis, your skin absorbs, on average, 5 pounds of chemicals each year.

There are more than 10,000 cosmetic and personal care products available in the U.S. alone. Of those products, the Environmental Working Group estimates that 99% contain one or more ingredients that have never been tested or evaluated for safety. Why would so many skin care products include so many toxic ingredients, and why is there such a vast difference in price?

The short answer is: they're cheap, readily available, and easy to manufacture. Your pocketbook may benefit from the lower cost, but your skin – and your health – could pay the price.

On the other hand, a more expensive price doesn't necessarily mean you're getting a higher quality product. And it doesn't guarantee the purity of the ingredients.

Often, so-called "luxury" brands combine expensive and effective ingredients that savvy consumers will recognize with the same toxic ingredients used in lower-priced brands. The bottom line: when you mix effective, natural ingredients with toxins, the lasting effect is still a harmful one.

What can you do to protect yourself? The answer is simple: Educate yourself about what's in the skin care products you use. Check for yourself – are any of the following ingredients in the products you currently use? This is just a short list of commonly used ingredients that should be on your red-flag list:

Mineral Oil or Paraffin (Derived from petroleum, oxidizer)	Propylene Glycol or Butylene Glycol (Organ system toxicant, linked to kidney damage and liver abnormalities)	Phenoxyethanol (Allergenic substance, reproductive toxicity concerns)
Polyquaternium-7, Polyethylene Glycol (PEG), or Ethylene Glycol (EG) (Skin irritants, listed as a known carcinogen by the FDA)	Disodium EDTA (Enhances skin penetration of all ingredients)	Glyceryl Stearate or Glyceryl Stearate SE (Oxidizers)
PEG-8, PEG-40, PEG-100 Stearate or other PEGs (Skin irritants, increases risk of premature aging)	Potassium Hydroxide or Sodium Hydroxide (Skin irritants, toxic to neurological and organ systems, degrades natural skin barrier)	Parabens (Methyl, Propyl, Butyl or Ethyl) (Endocrine disruption, toxic to the organ system, biochemical or cellular level changes)

Comparing Prices and Ingredients

What about the price, you ask? Amazon Rain products offer the most competitive prices for its organic ingredients from nature's purest source. When you take a look at the prices for similar products in each category, some of them may be lower than the Amazon Rain products. But, what you get is a load of PEGs, hydrogenated and mineral oils, and parabens – just to name a few.

On the other hand, when you compare prices in the Serum category, many times you'll pay more for products that are full of Butylene Glycol, PEGs, Ethylparabens, and artificial colors and perfume. You can find a list of other brands' harmful ingredients in the Product Comparison Charts on the AmazonRain.net website.

All of the products we compared to Amazon Rain use ingredients that can be easily manufactured in the lab or sourced from petroleum by-products. When you choose Amazon Rain products, you're making the choice to put only safe, natural, therapeutic ingredients on your skin. You also help preserve the Rainforest and the Indigenous people who extract these pure ingredients... ingredients that are backed by impressive research, showing a wide array of natural substances that influence cellular regeneration.

While you are free to choose which products you use, you should keep in mind what impact they have on your skin, your health, and the prosperity of the Amazon Rainforest.
